

Getting Promoted

Summer jobs, internships and part-time jobs at hotels, restaurants, theme parks and attractions can provide income and experience, but not always a viable career opportunity. So what if you find that you are really good at what you do, you like the people and the atmosphere at your job, and you want to pursue your career at that company?

Well, you need to:

ABAHE

- Speak up — If you want management to be watchful of career opportunities where you are working, you must make them aware that you want to advance.
- Be highly visible — Make sure the management team knows who you are.
- Find a mentor — Find someone with more experience than you and learn from them. If they're good at what they do, there are reasons for it.
- Don't settle for the status quo — being creative gets noticed.
- Take on more responsibilities — Become the expert on at least one aspect of your job.
- Always present the highest quality work ethic — Be early, stay late, solve problems.
- Start taking classes that are related to that industry — And let your supervisor know you're doing so.
